

Harold Hongju Koh

I think he had a very deep commitment to just the fundamental principals of the Universal Declaration, the covenants of political rights. I don't think George stayed in touch with the developments as much as some people. I don't think he ever focused particularly on women's rights or certainly rights of gays and lesbians. These were of another era. I don't he had any lack of feeling for those, but those weren't his passions, and he was a Franklin Roosevelt kind of guy.
