CLINICS

Actual Innocence Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students screen and investigate claims by inmates that they are actually innocent of the offenses for which they are incarcerated. While investigating cases, students typically interview witnesses, research cases, review trial transcripts, and visit inmates in prison. The weekly class addresses topics relevant to actual innocence law and procedure.

Capital Punishment Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students work closely with experienced attorneys in the representation of indigent defendants charged with or convicted of capital offenses. Cases are at the trial, appellate, and post-conviction stages of litigation. Students perform tasks integral to effective representation, including: visiting clients, interviewing witnesses, conducting investigations, drafting pleadings, and assisting with preparation for trials, evidentiary hearings, and appellate arguments.

Children's Rights Clinic (In-person)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students represent children in Travis County District Court as student attorneys ad litem in cases in which the state seeks custody or termination of parental rights based on allegations of abuse and neglect. Although the supervising attorneys sign pleadings drafted by the student and accompany the student to formal proceedings, the student attorneys sit "first chair" at hearings, depositions, mediations and trial appearances, and they research and prepare cases as the primary attorneys.

Civil Rights Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students in the Civil Rights Clinic represent low-income clients in a range of civil rights matters such as discrimination in housing, employment or public accommodations, prisoners' rights, or freedom of religion, speech and association. Working under faculty supervision, students will directly participate in civil rights litigation and advocacy. Students hone their lawyering skills, including client and witness interviewing and counseling, fact investigation and analysis, negotiation, drafting pleadings and motions, and trial advocacy. Students work on their cases in teams under the supervision of clinic faculty, with whom they meet weekly.

Criminal Defense Clinic (In-person)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students represent indigent defendants charged with misdemeanors in Travis County. Typical offenses include DWI, theft, assault, and drug possession. Students function as the "first chair" attorneys, with the supervising attorneys sitting as "second chair" during court proceedings. Students arrange jail releases, interview clients and witnesses, litigate pretrial issues, negotiate with prosecutors, and try cases to judges and juries. For appeals, students review transcripts, write briefs, and present oral arguments.

Domestic Violence Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students represent victims of domestic violence with a variety of civil legal problems including custody, divorce, visitation, housing, consumer, public assistance and procurement of protective orders. Students sit “first chair,” and are responsible for all tasks associated with their cases. They meet with clients, draft pleadings, interview witnesses, draft and respond to discovery, take depositions, negotiate settlements, and conduct trials.

Entrepreneurship and Community Development Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students provide transactional business law representation to entrepreneurs, nonprofit organizations, and community groups. Clinic clients strengthen their local communities by producing and preserving affordable housing, creating asset-building strategies for low-income individuals, and providing valuable goods and services. Typical legal matters involved include choice of entity counseling, formation of for-profit and nonprofit entities, assistance with federal tax-exempt status, contract review and drafting, real estate work, trademark and copyright work, employment law counseling, and general counsel services for nonprofit boards of directors. The Clinic also offers a policy focus through which students work with community groups to develop local and statewide policy solutions to community development issues.

Environmental Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students work on cases and projects to improve public health and environmental quality for low-income communities. Students are responsible for all aspects of client representation, including factual investigation, meeting with public and private officials, developing strategy, research and writing, advocacy in contested permit proceedings and public meetings, and client communication. The Clinic works closely with outside attorneys, government and elected officials, and community leaders.

Housing Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN SPRING ONLY)

Students represent low-income families in their housing-related legal problems. The primary focus is helping clients avoid homelessness and gain access to affordable housing. Clinic work often involves representing clients in threatened evictions, denials of public housing, subsidized housing and Section 8 housing, and other aspects of landlord-tenant law. Some opportunity also exists for real estate related work for individuals and community-based nonprofit groups. Students interview clients, investigate cases, research issues, negotiate with opposing parties, draft pleadings and discovery, and represent clients in administrative hearings and in court. The Clinic is based at Texas Rio Grande Legal Aid.

Human Rights Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students work on a range of human rights projects and cases from the advocate's perspective. The work handled by the Clinic illustrates the breadth of human rights practice, including fact-finding, research, press and other public advocacy. The Clinic develops both theoretical and practical skills by involving students in activities such as supporting litigation of human rights claims; investigating and documenting human rights violations; supporting advocacy initiatives before human rights bodies; and engaging with global and local human rights campaigns.

Immigration Clinic (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students represent low-income immigrants before the immigration courts, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), the Board of Immigration Appeals, and the federal courts. Cases include bond and deportation hearings, asylum applications, Violence Against Women's Act (VAWA) cases, and applications for discretionary relief. Students engage in the full range of lawyering activities including: interviewing clients, developing strategy, preparing witnesses, and presenting cases before the courts and the immigration agency.

Juvenile Justice Clinic (In-person)

(OFFERED IN SPRING ONLY)

Students serve as student attorneys with the Travis County Juvenile Public Defender. Clients are indigent juveniles, aged 10 to 17, charged with criminal offenses ranging from Class B misdemeanors to first-degree felonies. Students learn juvenile law, interact with clients, advocate in court proceedings, and educate children about the law. Students have primary responsibility for cases under the supervision of experienced attorneys in the public defender's office, performing all investigation, interviews, discovery, negotiation and litigation functions on their cases. The Clinic is based at the Travis County Juvenile Public Defender.

Law and Religion Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students participate in representing individuals and groups of all faiths who face challenges to their religious liberty. This will involve a diverse array of clients: prisoners, mosques, students, employees, churches, teachers, faith-based schools, sanctuary churches, and immigrants. Students can expect to work on cases involving the Free Exercise Clause, the Establishment Clause, similar state constitutional provisions, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, its state equivalents, antidiscrimination statutes, Title VII, and the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act. Students will have the opportunity to be first chair on some matters or serve as co-counsel with faculty or outside civil rights organizations and law firms on others.

Supreme Court Clinic (Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students work closely with faculty members on cases before the United States Supreme Court. Students assist in representing clients who are seeking review of lower court decisions or who have cases before the Supreme Court following grants of certiorari. Students conduct in-depth research and draft pleadings such as petitions for certiorari, briefs in opposition, reply briefs, and merits briefs. The weekly class introduces students to Supreme Court procedures and practice.

Transnational Worker Rights Clinic (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students represent low-income immigrant workers in cases to recover unpaid wages, and engage in other advocacy projects asserting the rights of workers here and abroad. Depending on the case, students participate in worker education meetings, interview and advise clients, investigate facts, develop strategy, negotiate with opposing parties, research issues, prepare legal documents, and represent clients in litigation, administrative matters, community-based enforcement actions, and claims filed for criminal prosecution on wage fraud charges. Students help their clients acquire the knowledge and skills to protect their own employment rights, while grounding their representation efforts in the broader context of transnational and international labor rights advocacy. The Clinic is based at the Equal Justice Center.

INTERNSHIPS

Federal Public Defender Internship (In-person)

(TWO SEMESTER COMMITMENT)

Students work under the supervision of experienced Assistant Federal Public Defenders in the Office of the Federal Public Defender for the Western District of Texas in Austin. The internship requires a two-semester commitment. By working closely with federal public defenders, students learn about attorney-client relationships, indictments, the Federal Sentencing Guidelines, plea bargaining, evidentiary and witness issues, and the discovery process. Typically students engage in significant legal research and writing, assist with trial preparation, and observe courtroom proceedings. (Full for Spring 2021).

Government Internship (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL, SPRING AND SUMMER)

Students work closely with experienced attorneys in government agencies, gaining experience that the students reflect upon in class. The course addresses topics relevant to public service lawyering such as professionalism, ethics, advocacy, access to justice, and the legal profession. Interns develop their professional skills and study the role of lawyers and legal institutions in the context of real world practice. The instructor consults with each student to develop a field placement. (The class will meet online; students may intern in-person or online).

Judicial Internship (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL, SPRING AND SUMMER)

Students learn about judicial decision-making and hone their analytical, research and writing skills by interning with courts. Typically, students research legal issues relating to pending matters and draft opinions and memoranda under the close supervision of judges, their law clerks and staff attorneys. Students also observe court proceedings and learn about court procedure and legal advocacy. (The class will meet online; students may intern in-person or online).

Legislative Internship (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Interns study the legislative process by working on legal issues under the supervision of experienced attorneys in offices connected to the Texas Legislature. Students learn about the role of lawyers in the operations and processes of governing, build key professional skills, and gain insight into the intersection of law and policy. Available placement offices are identified on the course website. The instructor consults with each student to develop the field placement. (The class will meet online; students may intern in-person or online).

Nonprofit Internship (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL, SPRING AND SUMMER)

Students work closely with experienced attorneys in nonprofit organizations, gaining experience that the students reflect upon in class. The course addresses topics relevant to public service lawyering such as professionalism, ethics, advocacy, and access to justice. Interns develop their professional skills and study the role of lawyers and legal institutions in the context of real world practice. The instructor consults with each student to develop the field placement. (The class will meet online; students may intern in-person or online).

Prosecution Internship (In-person or Online)

(OFFERED IN FALL, SPRING AND SUMMER)

Students explore the substantive law and legal issues commonly encountered in criminal prosecutions and learn about the unique duties and responsibilities of a criminal prosecutor as both an advocate and a minister of justice. Each student is assigned to a Travis County trial court and is supervised by the Assistant District Attorneys assigned to the court. Students experience all aspects of the day-to-day functions of the prosecutors, and some students may have the opportunity to participate in courtroom proceedings. (The class will meet online; students may intern in-person or online).

Semester in Practice Internship (In-person)

(OFFERED IN FALL AND SPRING)

Students work full-time under the supervision of experienced attorneys in government, nonprofit and legislative offices outside of the Austin area. Interns immerse themselves in practice, developing their professional skills and studying the role of lawyers and legal institutions. The course addresses topics relevant to public service lawyering in varied settings, including professionalism, ethics, advocacy, access to justice, and the intersection of law and policy. Each student consults with the instructor to arrange the field placement.

U.S. Attorney Internship (In-person)

(TWO SEMESTER COMMITMENT)

Students work under the supervision of experienced Assistant U.S. Attorneys in the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Texas for two semesters. By working closely with federal criminal prosecutors, students learn about grand jury procedure, drafting indictments, calculating sentences under the Federal Sentencing Guidelines, designing undercover operations, selecting a jury, plea bargaining, and responding to evidentiary and discovery objections. Typically students engage in significant legal research and writing, assist with trial preparation, and observe courtroom proceedings. (Full for Spring 2021).

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT CLINICS AND INTERNSHIPS

Do students enjoy clinics and internships?

Yes! Students often report that a clinic or internship is one of their favorite experiences in law school. Working with the faculty and outside attorneys on real cases can be a great way to improve your professional skills and build working relationships in the legal community.

Do many students take clinics and internships?

Yes – most of our students participate in at least one clinic or internship, and many take several.

Do I need to be committed to the area of law covered in a particular course?

No – many students enroll in clinics and internships in order to build their skills and to explore subject areas that they will not pursue immediately following graduation.

Which courses are likely to give me the opportunity to appear at hearings?

- Children’s Rights Clinic
- Criminal Defense Clinic
- Domestic Violence Clinic
- Housing Clinic
- Immigration Clinic
- Juvenile Justice Clinic
- Transnational Worker Rights Clinic
- Government Internship
- Prosecution Internship

Are any courses particularly suited for students interested in transactional and policy areas of law rather than in litigation?

Yes. The Entrepreneurship and Community Development, Environmental, and Human Rights clinics involve work that is non-litigation in nature. Many internship courses also have numerous placements in non-litigation settings.

May I enroll in a clinic or internship more than once?

A small number of students may enroll in a clinic for a second time as Advanced Clinic students, subject to instructor approval. It is not possible to enroll in an internship course more than once (other than the U.S. Attorney Internship and the Federal Public Defender Internship, which require a two semester commitment).

Can I take more than one clinic or internship at a time?

It is possible but strongly discouraged because of the time commitment required, and advance approval of both instructors is required.

Is there any limit to the number of clinics and internships I can take for credit?

No, although a student may count toward a J.D. degree no more than 21 hours of credit from a combination of internships, directed study, and non-law courses.

Do I have to pay tuition for an internship?

Yes – an academic internship is considered a course and you must register for it and pay tuition during the semester of your internship. Financial aid is available as for any other course.

Are clinics and internships more work than classroom courses?

Many students report that a clinical course requires as much time as a challenging classroom course. The workload often varies during the semester, depending on the demands of particular projects. Most clinics and internships conclude prior to final exams.

Are there any full-time internships offered next semester?

Yes. There are two full-time internships offered for 10 credits: the Semester in Practice Internship and the Legislative Internship. The Legislative Internship is offered as a 4-credit course and an optional 6-credit supplement. The supplement is available only during the regular session of the Texas Legislature (spring semester in odd-numbered years) and is only available for in-person work.

How do I enroll in a clinic or internship?

All clinics and internships require an application. Application information is available on the clinical website

APPLICATION INFORMATION - SPRING 2021

Applying for Clinics

Students must be in good academic standing to enroll in a clinic, and all courses require an application. Clinics generally fill up, so interested students should apply as soon as possible. Students not admitted to a clinic during early registration may apply subsequently if spots remain available.

Applications for Spring 2021 will be available October 8, 2020. First round applications are due at the end of early registration, 5:00 pm October 20, 2020. After early registration, applications may be considered on a rolling basis, if space remains.

All application materials are submitted electronically. Questions about the application process should be directed to Sonja Hartley, Senior Program Coordinator, at ClinicalED@law.utexas.edu.

You must complete:

- The General Clinic Application (UT EID required)

You must also upload the following materials with your online clinic application.

- Your resume
- An unofficial copy of your law school transcript (available online)

You may apply for one, two or three clinics, and you must rank them on the General Clinic Application in order of preference. Apply only to clinics in which you are prepared to enroll.

Students will be notified when the clinic admission decisions have been made. Clinics are not part of the online early registration system. Each student admitted to a clinic must add it during the next available add/drop period and adjust his or her schedule. At the end of the applicable add/drop period, students admitted to a clinic will be dropped from any conflicting classes.

Applying for Internships

Students must be in good academic standing to enroll in an internship, and all courses require an application for instructor approval. The internship faculty and the Career Services Office are available to help you find an internship placement. Visit the relevant internship course website to review information about placements and access the application instructions. Most internships are arranged after the early registration period ends, and students adjust their schedules during an add/drop period after they are admitted to the internship course.
