OUR MISSION is to serve as a focal point for critical, interdisciplinary analysis and practice of human rights and social justice.

STAFF

Karen Engle is Minerva House Drysdale Regents Chair in Law and Founder and Co-Director of the Rapoport Center. Engle publishes and lectures extensively on international law and human rights, with focuses on indigenous and Afro-descendant rights in the Americas, gender, and international criminal justice.

Daniel Brinks is Associate Professor of Government and Co-Director of the Rapoport Center. He is a faculty advisor for the graduate human rights concentration in Latin American Studies. He has researched and written broadly on law, human rights, and comparative politics in Latin America.

William Chandler is Assistant Director of the Rapoport Center and recipient of the 2014 President’s Outstanding Staff Award. He manages the daily operations of the Center and supervises the fellowship and internship programs. His research interests include global water rights and alternative responses to transnational crime in the Americas.

Ariel Dulitzky is Clinical Professor of Law and Director of the Human Rights Clinic. He also directs the Rapoport Center’s internship program. Dulitzky is an expert in the inter-American human rights system and has published on human rights, racial discrimination, and the rule of law in Latin America.

Barbara Harlow is Louann and Larry Temple Centennial Professor of English Literature and chair of the faculty panel for the Human Rights & Social Justice Bridging Disciplines Program. Her teaching, research, and writing focus on third world studies, critical theory, prison and resistance writings, and postcolonial studies.

Joe Bailey, Jr. is a fellow at the Rapoport Center, lending motion picture and sound expertise to the Frances T. “Sissy” Farenthold Archives Project. An award-winning film-maker and Texas Law graduate (’08), he also teaches “Documentary & Civil Society” in the Plan II Honors Program.

Susan Smith Richardson is an advisor for the Frances T. “Sissy” Farenthold Archives Project. Richardson is editor and publisher of The Chicago Reporter, and worked previously as a senior writer at the MacArthur Foundation. She has been a journalist for more than 20 years, writing extensively about social justice issues.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1 DIRECTORS’ LETTER
2 FORD FOUNDATION GRANT
4 RETHINKING HEALTH & INEQUALITY
5 HONORING SISSY FARENTHOLD
8 FIELDWORK AND CLINICS
9 STUDENT ENGAGEMENT
DIRECTORS’ LETTER

Like very few others, this past year’s signature event raised provocative questions for those of us who care about human rights. We’re referring, of course, to our celebration of Sissy Farenthold’s work, which was the subject of our annual conference and related projects (see pages 6–8). It became increasingly evident, as we used events from her illustrious career to trigger reflections about today, that the issues to which she has devoted her life remain crucial challenges for human rights scholars and activists. The fact that so little has changed even as so much has changed raises an important question: after many more lifetimes of inspirational work on behalf of social justice, will we still observe the same prejudice, oppression, and violence? Especially in the context of growing inequality and the ever-increasing transnationalization of problems and solutions, is the human rights movement up to the task of addressing the crucial issues of the day?

Consider just three of the issues we discussed at our conference. First, Sissy at one point proposed eliminating the Texas Rangers out of concern for their indiscriminate and often violent treatment of Mexican Americans in South Texas. Even as we write this, Texas—indeed the entire country—is marking the one-year anniversary of the shooting of Michael Brown by confronting yet another shooting of an unarmed black man by a Texas law enforcement officer. Second, Sissy has long taken aim at barriers faced by poor women and women of color in exercising their reproductive rights. This issue remains at the core of progressive battles for women’s rights. Finally, nothing marks Sissy’s early political career more than the fight against the pernicious influence of money in politics. This year will surely bring us to the high water mark—so far at least—for the influence of money in politics, with billions being raised and spent in pursuit of elected office. Inequality marks every aspect of the exercise of rights—from the right to be free from state violence to the ability to exercise rights nominally protected by our constitution and to participate on an equal footing in the democratic process.

What should be our response to the perennial nature of these human rights challenges? Should we shrug our shoulders, mutter “Plus ça change…” and keep toiling with our heads down? Or is it time to reflect on the strengths and limitations of the movement and the strategies we have pursued thus far?

This past year we proposed the latter to the Ford Foundation, as we successfully sought support for a project to consider questions such as the following: How can the human rights movement respond most effectively to the twenty-first century versions of these old challenges, especially in light of the radically changed global and economic context in which we must work? Where do oppression and inequality manifest most clearly today, and how can we build on the positive and negative experiences of the human rights movement to devise more effective strategies for addressing them?

With the help of the Ford Foundation grant, we will examine these questions over the next five years (see pages 2–3) by gathering knowledge and experiences from around the globe; building networks of academics, activists, and students; theorizing and examining the way inequality produces and reproduces oppression and injustice both within and between nations; and formulating new, or renewed, responses to perennial problems. We will do so, at least initially, in the context of the global rush to extract natural resources in order to feed the current developmentalist economic model and through consideration of new and old forms of labor markets and labor rights.

We very much look forward to making this journey with all of you who have accompanied us over the last ten years. We will make sure to keep you informed as we make our way across a landscape that is both new and strangely familiar.
Ford Foundation supports Center’s work on inequality
Project to focus on natural resources and labor

From hydraulic fracking on indigenous lands in North America to the mistreatment of temporary workers in Qatar, environmental and labor exploitation have long been entangled with issues of inequality. Climate change and other global transformations, moreover, can only be expected to exacerbate conditions of suffering and precarity for our world’s most vulnerable populations. Increasingly, it has become clear that the global human rights movement must work differently to meaningfully confront global problems.

Rethinking global human rights for the twenty-first century is the imperative underlying the Rapoport Center’s new five-year project, led by Rapoport Center co-directors Daniel Brinks (Government) and Karen Engle (Law) along with Human Rights Clinic director Ariel Dulitzky (Law). Equipped with an initial grant of $400,000 from the Ford Foundation to support the first two years, this project aims to gather human rights advocates from around the world to help imagine a new architecture for the global human rights movement. We will begin with two substantive areas: natural resource governance and labor rights. Through this work, the Center joins Ford in a collective effort to find, as Ford Foundation President and Texas Law alum Darren Walker (’86) put it, “creative ways to disrupt the drivers of inequality.”

Undergirding this project is the belief that global inequalities—both within and across countries—interact with the demand for natural resources and cheap labor to produce some of the most crucial issues for human rights activists and scholars today. Engle points out that, “Despite considerable advances since the 1970s, it is clear that human rights practice has not solved the globe’s most pressing problems. The world might be more democratic, but it is also more unequal.”

Building on the Center’s decade of human rights work, the project will be guided by five key observations. First, human rights work should be more decentralized and shifted to the Global South, but must remain in close collaboration with efforts in the Global North where many of the problems have important origins. Second, and relatedly, human rights work must understand and reflect the reality that in their causes and effects, oppression and injustice are not contained within national boundaries. Third, we must pay more attention to the role of non-state actors, international flows, and other seemingly indirect causes of human rights violations. Fourth, information and communications technologies have created new opportunities and risks, and both must be better understood for effective human rights work. And finally, human rights work needs to be forward-looking, anticipating and preventing as much as redressing and punishing violations.

In addition to their central importance to the human rights agenda, the pursuit and governance of natural resources and global labor implicate all five of these key observations, and thus offer a unique opportunity to explore the possibilities and shortcomings of human rights work.

The project will continue the Rapoport Center’s collaborative, interdisciplinary approach and attention to work on inequality. Ford Foundation supports Center's activists and scholars today. Engle points out that, "Despite produce some of the most crucial issues for human rights inequalities—both within and across countries—interact inequality. "

Walker ('86) put it, "creative ways to disrupt the drivers of natural resource governance and labor rights. Through this to help imagine a new architecture for the global human to gather human rights advocates from around the world Foundation to support the first two years, this project aims Equipped with an initial grant of $400,000 from the Ford with Human Rights Clinic director Ariel Dulitzky (Law). Daniel Brinks (Government) and Karen Engle (Law) along five-year project, led by Rapoport Center co-directors is the imperative underlying the Rapoport Center's new problems. The world might be more democratic, but it is increasingly, expected to exacerbate conditions of suffering and precarity and other global transformations, moreover, can only be been entangled with issues of inequality. Climate change Qatar, environmental and labor exploitation have long America to the mistreatment of temporary workers in From hydraulic fracking on indigenous lands in North collaborative, interdisciplinary approach and attention to global labor implicate all five of these key observations, and agenda, the pursuit and governance of natural resources and technologies have created new opportunities and risks, and violations. Fourth, information and communications flows, and other seemingly indirect causes of human rights more attention to the role of non-state actors, international contained within national boundaries. Third, we must pay to their causes and effects, oppression and injustice are not rights work must understand and reflect the reality that in efforts in the Global North where many of the problems Global South, but must remain in close collaboration with rights work should be more decentralized and shifted to the project will be guided by five key observations. First, human on the effects of changing global structures, this project promises to lay the groundwork for the next generation of human rights work.

As Martin Abregú, Vice President of Democracy, Rights, and Justice at Ford put it, "We believe this project will result in valuable insights from across the sector and help inform the emergent architecture of the global human rights network."

To provide intellectual and administrative leadership to the project, Julia Dehm will join the Center as Postdoctoral Fellow in Human Rights and Justice. Dehm is a Ph.D. Candidate at Melbourne Law School. Her dissertation examines the social implications of carbon offset schemes in order to investigate contemporary reconfigurations of control by the Global North over forested land and biological resources in the Global South.

The Rapoport Center has always been interested in exposing the shortcomings of existing approaches to human rights and in finding new ones. With this explicit focus on the effects of changing global structures, this project promises to lay the groundwork for the next generation of human rights work.
Rethinking health & inequality
Center collaborates with public health community for fall events

How do we reconcile the oft-repeated claim that human life is sacred with the massive disparities that exist in life expectancy and health care both within and between nations? What role can human rights play in remedying such disparities? These themes seized the Rapoport Center during the fall of 2014 as we focused on health and human rights through a two-day summit and semester-long colloquium series. The events were the result of a collaboration with the Dell Medical School, the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health, the Graduate School, and St. David’s Center for Health Promotion and Disease Prevention Research in Underserved Populations.

Creating Model Health Communities

Over one hundred leaders from local government, community health organizations, and the university gathered over two days last fall with a common mission: to address health inequities by catalyzing new ideas and innovative collaborations to ensure the healthy future of all residents of Austin and Travis County. The “Creating Model Health Communities” summit harnessed the knowledge of researchers, medical providers, and policy-makers and coincided with the creation of the new Dell Medical School at the University of Texas at Austin, which promises to transform the landscape of health care in Central Texas.

Part I of the Summit, held on September 23, began with the recognition of one of the most tragically stubborn facts of American political and social life: when it comes to health, we are not all treated equally. Building largely on research on social determinants of health, participants worked together to suggest university-community strategies for promoting a community-based view of health, one that encourages and supports not only physical and mental health, but economic, environmental, social, psychological, and political health as well.

The well-known adage “think globally, act locally” inspired Part II of the Summit on October 7, which considered how human rights and community health engagement models that have developed and been used in other parts of the world might usefully help guide service provision, training, research, and advocacy in our piece of the world. A number of speakers discussed how the language and concepts of human rights might inform a strategy for breaking through the political and ideological impasse that seems to stymie most efforts to address inequities on a broad scale.

“If the right decisions are made now, they will embed themselves in the DNA of the medical school and the health—and healthy—community that coalesces around it.”

Clay Johnston (Dean and Vice President for Medical Affairs, Dell Medical School) noted the importance of having the summit in the early days of planning for the school. “If the right decisions are made now, they will embed themselves in the DNA of the medical school and the health—and healthy—community that coalesces around it.”
What is a life worth?: Health & Human Rights Colloquium

by Cianan Good (LLM ’15)

When Professor Lovell Jones spoke passionately about the extent to which minority populations in the U.S. suffer disproportionate health outcomes, it seemed all too easy (particularly to a British law student experiencing the vagaries of the U.S. health system for the first time) to blame the problem on a disconnected, capricious health system. Indeed, listening to Dr. Mitchell Katz discuss the successes of the single-payer Healthy San Francisco program, it was tempting to think that a national health system providing coverage to all might resolve health disparities.

Of course, what Jones was seeking to impart to his audience—and the idea that really all the lecturers in the series would come to grapple with to a greater or lesser extent—was that the situation is far more complex than just providing better, or even more, health care. Access to health care is simply one manifestation of the ways in which we value life. Jones argued that we will not resolve health disparities until we address the dynamics of inequality affecting individual lives, which include biological and cultural factors, social and physical environments, racism, and educational outcomes.

Professor Didier Fassin would later apply a similar analysis in his consideration of an Israeli documentary, Precious Life. The film contrasts the extreme life-saving measures taken by an Israeli hospital to save the life of a single Palestinian child with the everyday disregard for the suffering of the wider Palestinian population currently living in Gaza. For Fassin, ensuring social justice in Gaza (or elsewhere) requires a reckoning with the “the ordinary of disparities” rather than a focus on the “extraordinary of the exception.” Only if we realise that it is everyday inequality that is “both qualitatively and quantitatively the most obvious—or perhaps most tolerated—fact undermining the contemporary world” will we begin to start appreciating the true value of a life.

Might human rights assist with this recalibration of the ways in which lives are valued, and provide a vehicle to demand adequate housing, nutrition, and healthcare? Some of the speakers aimed to spell out such a possibility. For example, Professor Sofia Gruskin sought renegotiation of the value of a woman’s life through the prism of securing improved and more extensive sexual and reproductive rights.

Ultimately, the lectures suggested that health and human rights might dovetail in fruitful collaboration insofar as both have attention to the sanctity of the human life at their core. However, and as demonstrated most strikingly by Jones and Fassin, such mutual dependency must not rely upon a vague, philosophical premise that all lives start from a position of equal sanctity. Instead, a more realistic perspective should inform not only health service provision, but a myriad of policies, and must come to be reflected in our treatment of all lives, no matter how privileged or marginalized their origin.
HONORING SISSY FARENTHOLD:
A NOBLE CITIZEN

On April 23 and 24, 2015, the Rapoport Center drew together more than 200 people from across the hemisphere to celebrate the life and times of one of the University of Texas School of Law’s most distinguished graduates, Frances Tarlton “Sissy” Farenthold (’49). The conference was the culmination of a multi-year project generously funded by the Creekmore and Adele Fath Charitable Foundation and offered an opportunity to consider the extraordinary breadth of Farenthold’s work addressing different social justice and human rights causes over the past six decades.

On the opening evening of the conference, the Rapoport Center launched an online exhibition on Farenthold’s career. We also screened original films directed by award-winning filmmaker Joe Bailey, Jr. (’08), which are available on the website (see page 8 for further details). The highlight, however, was Farenthold herself, who was interviewed by Evan Smith, editor-in-chief of The Texas Tribune.

Themes of history and its construction pervaded the conference, as Smith’s lively interview with Farenthold demonstrated. Together, they touched upon a series of issues on which Farenthold had worked as a Texas legislator from 1969-72 and addressed during her galvanizing campaigns for governor in 1972 and 1974. These included equality, the over-criminalization of low-level drug use, minority populations’ fear of the police, and the influence of money in politics—leading Smith to remark: “A theme today may be how little things have changed.”

The theme of history continued the following day, during which three panels of academics, activists, and current and former politicians considered contemporary national, international, and Texan affairs in light of historical documents selected from Farenthold’s papers, which are featured on the website launched at the conference and housed at the Dolph Briscoe Center for American History.

The first panel discussed the contemporary status of gay rights and reproductive rights in the U.S. It considered a 1973 speech Farenthold presented to the National Women’s Political Caucus as its first chair and a keynote speech she delivered in 1977 at the first organizing event on gay rights in Texas. Panel participants noted that modern-day barriers to abortion continue to make reproductive rights, as Farenthold had put it in 1973, “a class issue, a race issue, a privacy issue, even a consumer issue.” Panelists discussed Farenthold’s early support for gay rights at a time when the issue divided feminists. Houston LGBTQ advocate Ray Hill Themes of history and its construction pervaded the The Texas Tribune. However, was Farenthold herself, who was interviewed by on the website (see page 8 for further details). The highlight, winning filmmaker Joe Bailey, Jr. (’08), which are available career. We also screened original films directed by award-

Center launched an online exhibition on Farenthold’s On the opening evening of the conference, the Rapoport justice and human rights causes over the past six decades. The breadth of Farenthold’s work addressing different social as Farenthold had put it in 1973, “a class issue, a race issue, she delivered in 1977 at the first organizing event on gay Political Caucus as its first chair and a keynote speech 1973 speech Farenthold presented to the National Women’s work. Representative Fischer decried attempts to curtail equality, it’s still about fighting for reproductive freedom, and for us Hispanics it’s about more than grapes…it’s about education, it’s about sending our kids to college…”

HONORING FARENTHOLD: SISSY

Finally, the third panel returned to discussions of Farenthold’s political career, picking up where Evan Smith and Farenthold had left off the day before. Former Texas Representative Curtis Graves provided a vibrant recounting of his and Farenthold’s efforts to combat corruption in Texas state politics in the 1960s and 1970s as part of the “Dirty Thirty.” This prompted State Representative Trey Martinez Fischer and State Senator Sylvia Garcia to consider history’s echo in their current work. Representative Fischer decried attempts to curtail voting rights and restrict access to education, while Senator Garcia remarked: “It’s still about guns, it’s still about equality, it’s still about fighting for reproductive freedom, and for us Hispanics it’s about more than grapes…it’s about education, it’s about sending our kids to college.”

Constantly at the center of these debates—as engaged and indomitable as ever—was Farenthold herself. As Professor Karen Engle had remarked in her opening speech, our society’s potential for “historical amnesia” was not lost on Farenthold; it was a theme she frequently engaged with during her career. Tellingly, when asked to close the event, Farenthold refused to allow her own remarkable history to overshadow the important issues raised by the conference. Perhaps initially a little overawed by the heartfelt appreciation shown to her throughout the conference, Farenthold quickly recovered, and her final words to the conference displayed a familiar determination and zeal. Seeking a refocusing of attention, a renewal of efforts, an appreciation shown to her throughout the conference, overshadow the important issues raised by the conference.

“It’s still about guns, it’s still about equality, it’s still about fighting for reproductive freedom, and for us Hispanics it’s about more than grapes…it’s about education, it’s about sending our kids to college…”

PHOTO CAPTION & CREDIT Evan Smith interviews Farenthold on her life and career. Photo by Chris Roberts, 2015.

CONFERENCE PARTICIPANTS

Peggy Antrobus, Institution Builder, Activist, Writer
Joe Bailey, Jr., Filmmaker; Rapoport Center Fellow
Phyllis Bennis, Fellow, Institute for Policy Studies; Fellow, Transnational Institute (Amsterdam)
Khia Bridges, Associate Professor of Law and Associate Professor of Anthropology, Boston University School of Law
Daniel Brinks, Associate Professor of Government; Co-Director, Rapoport Center for Human Rights and Justice, University of Texas at Austin
Don Carleton, Executive Director, Dolph Briscoe Center for American History, University of Texas at Austin
Mary Anne Case, Arnold I. Shure Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School
Karen Engle, Minerva House Drysdale Regents Chair in Law; Co-director & Founder, Rapoport Center for Human Rights and Justice, University of Texas School of Law
Frances T. “Sissy” Farenthold, Former Texas State Representative; Former Chair, National Women’s Political Caucus; Trustee Emeritus, Institute for Policy Studies; Honorary Director, Rothko Chapel
Ward Farnsworth, Dean & John Jeffers Research Chair in Law, University of Texas School of Law
Cary Franklin, Professor of Law, University of Texas School of Law
Arvonne Fraser, Former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women; Senior Fellow Emerita, University of Minnesota
James Galbraith, Lloyd M. Bentsen Jr. Chair in Government/Business Relations, LBJ School of Public Affairs, and Professor of Government, University of Texas at Austin
Sylvia Garcia, Texas State Senator
Curtis Graves, Former Texas State Representative
Erica Grieder, Senior Editor, Texas Monthly
Ray Hill, LGBT Activist; Founder and Host, “The Prison Show”
Christopher Hooks, Journalist, The Texas Observer
Trey Martinez Fischer, Texas State Representative
Rachel Rebouché, Associate Professor of Law, Temple University Beasley School of Law
Evan Smith, Editor-in-Chief, CEO, and Co-Founder, The Texas Tribune
Louise Trubek, Clinical Professor of Law Emerita, University of Wisconsin Law School
SUPPORT THE FARENTHOLD ENDOWED LECTURE SERIES

We are pleased to announce, in partnership with the Rothko Chapel, the establishment of The Frances Tarlton “Sissy” Farenthold Endowed Lecture Series in Peace, Social Justice and Human Rights, which will honor Sissy for her relentless pursuit of social justice.

The lecture series will bring to Austin and Houston internationally renowned scholars, activists, and politicians who will inspire their audiences to think and act creatively to respond to some of the greatest challenges of twenty-first century. In line with Sissy’s own history of exposing and responding to injustices and inequality as both a public servant and citizen, we are pleased to announce that the inaugural lecturer is investigative journalist and author Mark Danner (see back cover). Danner’s talk is titled, “Spiraling Down: Human Rights, Endless War.”

Many of Sissy’s supporters from across the country have already donated or pledged over $85,000 to establish the endowment (see page 13 for a list of contributors). We are seeking an additional $115,000 to fully endow the series. We encourage you to support this important endeavor!

VISIT THE ONLINE EXHIBITION

rapoportcenter.org/farenthold

Know Sissy, but never knew she did so much? Don’t know Sissy, but want to learn more about her? We invite you to visit our online exhibition, which showcases important archival materials from Sissy’s papers along with four short films from award-winning filmmaker Joe Bailey, Jr. and team. The films use the archives as well as many hours of interviews we conducted with Farenthold and some of the people with whom she worked over the years to provide a preliminary glimpse into her incredible life and career.

On the website you can: view all four films; hear Coretta Scott King’s political endorsement of Sissy; read about Sissy’s work with Central American refugees; watch some of Sissy’s gubernatorial campaign ads; see a photo of Sissy with Nelson Mandela; and much more!

This online exhibition was the result of a five-year initiative to chronicle Farenthold’s life and career, and was made possible by the generous support of the Creekmore and Adele Fath Charitable Foundation and the partnership of the Briscoe Center for American History.
"Conducting legal research in a young democracy reveals the importance of combining advocacy, coalition building, and citizen education to encourage lawmaking that protects human rights and provides access to justice for all."

- Mihret Getabicha

RAPOPORT CENTER SUMMER FELLOWS

Kelsey Chapple
American Civil Liberties Union
Washington, DC

Skyler Collins
Texas Rio Grande Legal Aid
Austin, TX

Camila Cossío
Interamerican Association for Environmental Defense
San José, Costa Rica

Mihret Getabicha
Ghana Center for Democratic Development
Accra, Ghana

Helen Kerwin
Inter-American Court of Human Rights
San José, Costa Rica

Safa Peera
Constitutional Law Center for Muslims in America
Dallas, TX

Briana Perez
Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund
San Antonio, TX

Lochlin Rosen
International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia
The Hague, Netherlands

CLINIC HIGHLIGHTS

Human Rights Clinic
As part of a long-term project, presented a report entitled “Deadly Heat in Texas Prisons” to the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights at a hearing in October 2014.

Assisted the International Gay and Lesbian Human Rights Commission in preparing an amicus curiae brief in the Inter-American Court of Human Rights case of Ángel Duque v. Colombia, challenging the State’s denial of survivor benefits after the death of a same-sex partner.

Helped organize a conference in the Rio Grande Valley for activists, stakeholders, and local actors involved in the “Nuestro Texas” campaign, highlighting the impact of Texas reproductive health policy in the region.

Civil Rights Clinic
Engaged in civil rights litigation in federal court in Brownsville on behalf of a U.S. citizen alleging unlawful arrest and excessive use of force by a federal law enforcement officer.

Filed three habeas corpus actions in San Antonio seeking the release of Central American asylum seekers and their children, arguing they were detained in family detention facilities in violation of federal immigration laws and the Due Process Clause.

Worked with the Texas Fair Defense Project to research and document debtors’ prison practices in local Texas courts, including the failure to provide alternatives to imprisonment for indigent and low-income individuals faced with traffic tickets and other civil penalties.

Immigration Clinic
Acted as co-counsel with the ACLU in major class action litigation challenging the government’s family detention policies and practices, resulting in an injunction prohibiting the detention of Central American mothers and children.

Conducted a full-day merits hearing in the San Antonio Immigration Court, winning refugee protection for a mother and her 9-year-old son from Honduras.

With gratitude, to Professor Hines
Clinic Director Barbara Hines retired in December 2014, having been an integral part of the clinic’s work for 15 years and the Rapoport Center’s work since its inception. Thank you and best wishes, Barbara!
Students explore trajectory of human rights

Over the past year, three human rights scholars, two graduate fellows, and eight interns (see below) worked with faculty and staff of the Rapoport Center to explore both historical achievements and forward-looking innovations within the trajectory of human rights. They contributed countless hours to an online exhibition (see page 8) and conference (see pages 6-7) on the life and career of Sissy Farenthold, edited papers for the Working Paper Series (see page 11), engaged in research for a multi-year grant (see pages 2-3), worked with student organizations across campus (see below), and prepared this Annual Review. Their creativity, passion, and energy strengthen the Rapoport Center and advance our collaborative pursuit of global justice.

For more info, visit: rapoportcenter.org/students

---

INTERNS, SCHOLARS & FELLOWS

Undergraduate Interns
- Justin Atkinson, Government, Women's and Gender Studies
- Akira Conley, International Relations & Global Studies
- Eamon Dowd, Physics, Plan II Honors, Economics, History
- Victoria Grefer, History, Sociology
- Hannah Guernsey, International Relations & Global Studies, Government
- Collin Poirot, Plan II Honors, Political Communication, History
- Bennett Torres, Film Production
- Angela Yang, Human Biology

Human Rights Scholars
- Julia Furlong, Law
- Leah Glowacki, Law
- Rhiannon Hamam, Law

Graduate Fellows
- Cianan Good, Law
- Vivian Shaw, Sociology

---

STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

The Human Rights Law Society (HRLS) at Texas Law provides support for students interested in human rights and a space for members to discuss contemporary human rights issues.

For more info, visit: law.utexas.edu/student-affairs/organizations/human-rights-law-society

The Human Rights Student Advisory Council (HRSAC) is dedicated to serving the undergraduate community and aiding member organizations with human rights outreach, activities, and events.

For more info, visit: law.utexas.edu/human-rights/about/HRSAC.php

---

Audre Rapoport prize winner examines community mothers in Bogotá

Congratulations to Lina Buchely, winner of the 2014 Audre Rapoport Prize for Scholarship on Gender and Human Rights, for her article, “Bureaucratic Activism and Colombian Community Mothers: The Daily Construction of the Rule of Law.” Distinguished scholars from UT and abroad selected Buchely’s paper in an anonymous competition that received submissions from 22 universities in 12 countries.

Although most scholarship on the rule of law considers the role that legislators and judges play in its construction, Buchely’s paper highlights the ways that daily practices within the social welfare system influence the rule of law. Specifically based on fieldwork she conducted with Community Welfare Homes in Bogotá, Colombia, Buchely focuses on the role of community mothers—or women who are paid by the state to take care of other families’ children. Buchely demonstrates how these women—both as community members and part of the formal welfare state infrastructure—function as “street-level bureaucrats,” taking advantage of their relationship with the State as tools of empowerment within their communities.

Buchely earned her doctorate in law from Universidad de los Andes (Bogotá, Colombia) in 2014. She is currently a professor and director of the Gender Studies Group at Universidad Icesi (Cali, Colombia). Her paper is published online in the Rapoport Center's Human Rights Working Paper Series (see below) and also on the Center's website alongside previous prize winners.

Working Paper Series publications analyze activism in Colombia and Brazil

The two papers published by the Working Paper Series (WPS) this year shed light on political innovations adopted by marginalized groups, enriching contemporary debates on human rights “from below.” The first is Lina Buchely's Audre Rapoport Prize-winning paper (see above). The second is “Eliciting Self-determination: The Kayapo Mobilization Through Activism and Global Indigenous Media,” by Carla Silva-Muhammad, coordinator of the Brazil Center at the University of Texas at Austin.

Focusing on the Kayapo people, Silva-Muhammad’s paper explores media technology, such as video and the internet, as an important site for reclaiming indigenous agency. She argues that the Kayapo’s media practices subvert a Western-centric ethnographic gaze while also challenging international human rights discourses.

The Rapoport Center Human Rights Working Paper Series is dedicated to interdisciplinary and critical dialogue on international human rights law and discourse. To learn more, visit: sites.utexas.edu/rapoportcenterwps

The WPS also continues to foster international human rights scholarship through its collaboration with Sur: International Journal on Human Rights, a journal that is published biannually in English, Spanish, and Portuguese. WPS editors work with Sur to edit articles that have been translated to English from Spanish and Portuguese.

2014-2015 WPS Editorial Committee

Daniel Brinks, Associate Professor of Government; Co-Director, Rapoport Center for Human Rights and Justice

William Chandler, Assistant Director, Rapoport Center for Human Rights and Justice

Meredith Coffey, PhD Student, Department of English

Kallie Dale-Ramos, JD Candidate

Karen Engle, Minerva House Drysdale Regents Chair in Law; Co-director & Founder, Rapoport Center for Human Rights and Justice

David Fisher, JD Candidate

Julia Furlong, JD Candidate; Human Rights Scholar

Leah Glowacki, JD Candidate; Human Rights Scholar

Cianan Good, LLM Candidate

Rhiannon Hamam, JD Candidate; Human Rights Scholar

Barbara Harlow, Louann and Larry Temple Centennial Professor of English Literature

Helen Kerwin, JD Candidate

Megan Neely, PhD Candidate, Department of Sociology
AFFILIATED FACULTY

Omoniyi Afolabi, Spanish & Portuguese
*Kamran Ali, Anthropology
Katherine Arens, Germanic Studies
Arturo Arias, Spanish & Portuguese
Javier Ayuero, Sociology
Cecilia Balli, Anthropology
Bill Beardall, Law
Antonio Benjamin, Law
Douglas G. Blow, Classics
Paul Bonin-Rodriguez, Theatre & Dance
Pascale Bos, Germanic Studies
Oren Bracha, Law
*Daniel M. Brinks, Government
James Brow, Anthropology
Virginia Garrard Burnett, History
Noël Busch-Armendariz, Social Work
*Luis E. Cárcamo-Huechante, Spanish & Portuguese
Evon Carter, English
Mounira M. Charrad, Sociology
Ruramisai Charumbira, History
Michael J. Churgin, Law
Judith Coffin, History
Ann Cvetkovich, English
Donna DeCesare, Journalism
Mercedes Lynn de Uriarte, Journalism
Yoav Di-Capua, History
Henry Dietz, Government
Héctor Domínguez Ruvalcaba, Spanish & Portuguese
*Ariel Dulitzky, Law
David V. Edwards, Government
Sheldon Ekland-Olson, Sociology
Tarek El-Ariss, Middle Eastern Studies
Zachary Elkins, Government
*Karen Engle, Law
Rhonda Evans Case, Government
Joseph Fishkin, Law
William Forbath, Law, History
Cary Franklin, Law
Gary P. Freeman, Government
James Galbraith, Public Affairs
Julius Getman, Law
Kaushik Ghosh, Anthropology
Denise Gilman, Law
Andrea Giunta, Art & Art History
Terri Givens, Government
Gloria González-López, Sociology
Edmund T. Gordon, Anthropology
Laurie B. Green, History
Kenneth Greene, History
Benjamin Gregg, Government
Frank Guridy, History
*Charles R. Hale, Anthropology, Latin American Studies
Patricia Hansen, Law
*Barbara Harlow, English
Eden Harrington, Law
Fred Heath, UT Libraries
Susan Heinzelman, English, Center for Women's & Gender Studies
Clement Henry, Government
Richard Heyman, Geography & The Environment
Heather Hindman, Asian Studies
*Barbara Hines, Law
*Neville Hoad, English
Kristen Hogan, UT Libraries
Juliet Hooker, Government
Thomas K. Hubbard, Classics
Gary Jacobsohn, Government
Robert Jensen, Journalism
*Derek Jinks, Law
Omi Osun Joni L. Jones, African and African American Studies
Christian Kelleher, Benson Latin American Collection Robert
King, Linguistics
Gregory W. Knapp, Geography & The Environment
Alan Kuperman, Public Affairs
Jennifer Laurin, Law
Mark Lawrence, History
Jeffrey Leon, Philosophy
Lorraine Leu, Spanish & Portuguese
Sanford Levinson, Law
Ray Marshall, Public Affairs
Tracie M. Matysik, History
Sofian Merabet, Anthropology
Robin Moore, Ethnomusicology
Ranjana Natarajan, Law
Paula Newberg, Government
Jeanette Okur, Middle Eastern Studies
Kathleen Panoff, Texas Performing Arts
Raj Patel, Public Affairs
Gabriela Polito, Spanish & Portuguese
Jonathan Pratter, Tarlton Law Library
*Joe Randel, Texas Performing Arts
John T. Ratliff, Law
Judith Rhedin, Texas Performing Arts
Bryan R. Roberts, Sociology
Sharmila Rudrappa, Sociology
Christine E. Schmidt, Engineering
Megan Seaholm, History
Snehal Shingavi, English
Stephen Slawek, Ethnomusicology
Christen Smith, Anthropology
Stephen Sonnenberg, Architecture
*Shannon Speed, Anthropology
Denise A. Spellberg, History
Jordan Steiker, Law
Pauline Strong, Humanities Institute, Anthropology
Rebecca M. Torres, Geography & The Environment
Joao H. Vargas, Anthropology
David Warner, Public Affairs
Jay Westbrook, Law
Lyn Wiltshire, Theatre & Dance
Zipporah Wiseman, Law
*2014-2015 Steering Committee Member
DONORS

SUPPORT FOR THE RAPOPORT CENTER

CHAMPION ($25,000 or more)
Creekmore and Adele Fath Charitable Foundation
Ford Foundation

AMBASSADOR ($10,000 - $24,999)
The Planethood Foundation

ADVOCATE ($5,000 - $9,999)
Scott Hendler
Michael Tigar (Orlando Letelier and Ronnie Karpen Moffit Endowed Presidential Scholarship in Law)

SUPPORTER ($1,000 - $4,999)
John Hay
Robert King
Judson Wood, Jr.

CONTRIBUTOR ($500 - $999)
Ilene & Paul Barr
Lauren Ravkind

FRIEND (up to $499)
Steve Britt
Samia Broadaway
Caroline Carter
AC Conrad & Olive Hershey
Maddy Dwertman
Margaret Eubank
Tse-Han Amy Fang
Sherwin Faridifar
Jeremy Freeman
Nita Garg
F. Allen “Tex” Harris
Jennie Hoelscher
Laura Ashley Hoffmann
Kerry McCormick
Sanja Muranovic
Elliott Naishat
James Phillips
Thomas Quigley
Rachel Ratcliffe
Jody Schechter
Philip Spertus
Charles Thomas
Kathy Wilson
Mimi Yu

SUPPORT FOR THE FARENTHOLD ENDOWED LECTURE SERIES

CIRCLE OF FRIENDS ($5,000 or more)
Tom Cohen & Lisa Fuentes
Patricia Dougherty
Karen Engle & Ana Almaguel
Jan Fox
James Galbraith
Molly Gochman
Willy Kuehn
Eric & Carol Nelson
Dorothy Slater-Brown
Martha Claire Tompkins
American Income Life and National Income Life of New York

OTHER GENEROUS DONORS
Marie Adams
Scott J. Atlas
Julia Justice Cauthorn
AC Conrad & Olive Hershey
Gayle & Mike DeGuerin
Ann & Jeffrey Friedman
Melanie Gray
Vartan & Clare Gregorian
Michael & Michaela Keeling
Cele & Sam Keeper
Peaches & Harris Kempner
Sheryl Kolasinks
Fred Lewis
Rafael Longoria
Muffie Moroney
Christopher Rothko
Chula Sims
The Honorable Rose Spector
Cora Weiss
Peter Weiss

ADVISORY BOARD

Ben Barnes, Founding Partner and Principal, Ben Barnes
Group LP; Former Lieutenant Governor of Texas
Frances T. “Sissy” Farenthold, Former Texas State Representative; Former Chair, National Women’s Political Caucus; Trustee Emeritus, Institute for Policy Studies;
Honorary Director, Rothko Chapel
Susan Karamanian, Associate Dean for International and Comparative Legal Studies and Professional Lecturer in Law, George Washington University

David Kennedy, Manley O. Hudson Professor of Law and Faculty Director, Institute for Global Law and Policy,
Harvard Law School
Garry Mauro, Independent Government Relations
Professional; Former Texas Land Commissioner
Álvaro Restrepo, Co-Founder, El Colegio del Cuerpo
THE YEAR TO COME

Colloquium on Inequality & Human Rights

September 28, 2015

JAMES GALBRAITH, Lloyd M. Bentsen Jr. Chair in Government/ Business Relations and Professor, LBJ School, Department of Government, UT Austin
ALVARO SANTOS, Professor, Georgetown University Law Center
PHILOMILA TSOUKALA, Associate Professor, Georgetown University Law Center

October 12, 2015

SAMUEL MOYN, Professor of Law and History, Harvard University

October 26, 2015

BALAKRISHNAN RAJAGOPAL, Associate Professor, Department of Urban Studies, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

November 11, 2015

NAOMI KLEIN, Journalist and Author; C.L. and Henriette Cline Visiting Professor in the Humanities, UT Austin Humanities Institute

November 23, 2015

SAIKO FUKUDA-PARR, Professor, Milano School of International Affairs, The New School

Inaugural Farenthold Endowed Lecture

October 22, 2015

MARK DANNER, Journalist and Author; Chancellor’s Professor of English and Journalism, UC Berkeley; James Clarke Chace Professor of Foreign Affairs and Humanities, Bard College

Dialogue with Oscar Romero Awardees

November 10, 2015 (with the Rothko Chapel)
MIRIAM MIRANDA CHAMORRO, Organización Fraternal Negra Hondureña
BERTA CÁCERES, Consejo Civil de Organizaciones Populares e Indígenas de Honduras

Annual Conference

Spring 2016

Speaker Series

Spring 2016

JOSÉ AYLWIN, Co-Director, Observatorio Ciudadano, Chile; Professor of Indigenous Law, Universidad Austral de Chile
HINA JILANI, Advocate, Supreme Court of Pakistan; Human Rights Activist

DONATE

We depend on outside support. Contact us to learn about our endowment campaigns or give online at rapoportcenter.org/donate.

JOIN US ONLINE

Like us on Facebook
Follow us on Twitter
Join our network on LinkedIn
Subscribe to our YouTube channel

CONTACT US

(512) 232-4857
humanrights@law.utexas.edu
www.rapoportcenter.org