Dear alumni and supporters,

Happy new year!

A new semester has just begun. It's put a big spring in everyone's step, and we're bursting with opportunity and optimism. As we go forward, we continue to be grateful for the generosity and support that got us here. That's what this Recognition Report is all about.

We are so grateful. It is thanks to your outpouring of support that we can continue to fulfill our role as the flagship law school of Texas, and as one of the premier law schools in the nation. On behalf of the faculty and our students I want to say thank you for giving back—and for investing in our future!

Reunion 2026 Was One to Remember

Texas Law alumni whose graduation years end in 1 or 6 last celebrated Reunion in April 2021, when the pandemic kept them in Zoom rooms instead of classrooms. Reunion 2026 brought more than 800 graduates and guests back together in person for a weekend of reminiscence and long-overdue catching up.

The festivities began with a Kickoff Dinner and live music on Friday evening at the Four Seasons Hotel Austin and resumed the following day at Townes Hall with alumni, friends, and families.

On Saturday morning, alumni picked up hot-off-the-press copies of the latest edition of Texas Law Magazine before grabbing coffee and heading to faculty-led panels on pressing topics in the legal field. Each panel drew crowds so large that overflow seating was needed at each session.

The first panel, titled "Perspectives on SCOTUS: Theory & Practice," brought together Texas Law professors Erin Busby, Lisa Eskow, Tara Grove, and Aaron Nielson for a discussion of the most consequential cases before the U.S. Supreme Court this term. Shortly after, Professor Mechele Dickerson, Faculty Athletics Representative for UT, moderated a lively conversation on college athletics and NIL. She was joined by Professor Bobby Bramhall of The University of Tennessee's Winston College of Law and Mike Perrin '71, former UT athletic director and a former Texas Longhorn football player.

"It was such a privilege to see alumni reconnect and celebrate their past experiences at Texas Law," said Lindsay SanFilippo, director of alumni relations and reunions. "I love seeing our community come together to share their professional and personal journeys."

Following the panels, alumni gathered in the atrium for Dean Bobby Chesney's State of the Law School Address, which spotlighted the school's first-ever residence hall for law students. With more than 300 beds, a café, a gym, a library-style reading room, two roof decks, and proximity to campus, the residence hall is slated to open in August 2028.

"The residence hall looks great. I am having some jealousy about the long commute I made during my law school years!" said Carlotta Garza-Kilcullen '21.

Daytime programming also included guided school tours led by current students, lunch from Maudie's Tex-Mex, and kid-friendly activities.

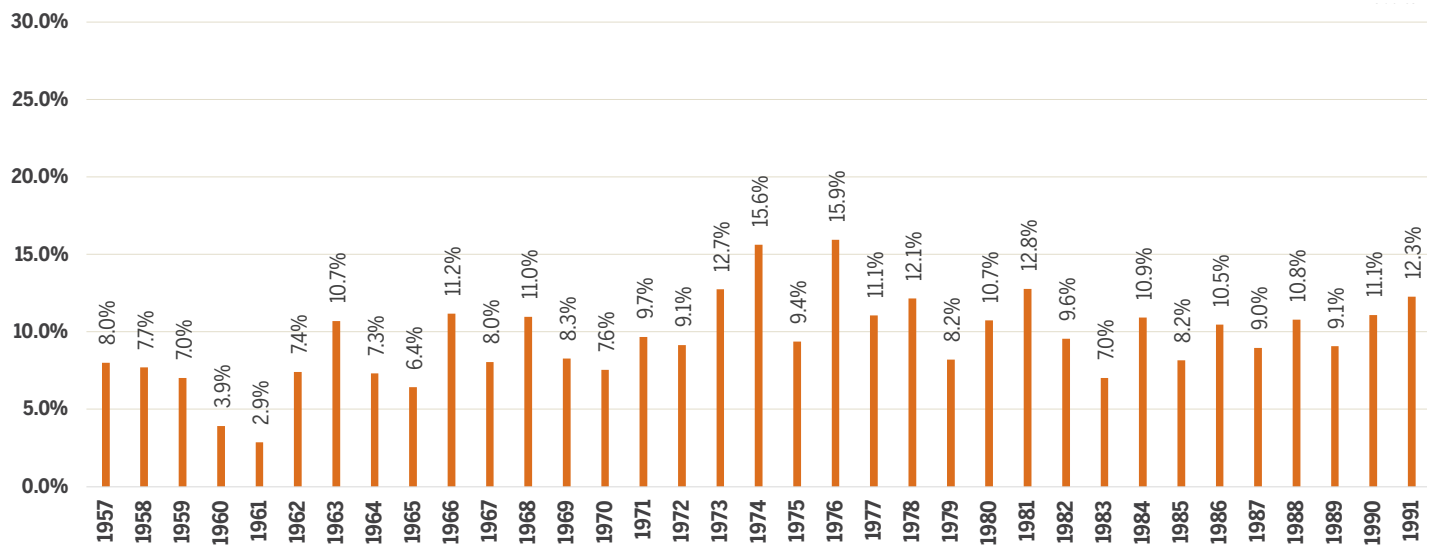

The celebration moved off campus that evening, as honored classes gathered for their very own class parties to favorite venues across the city.

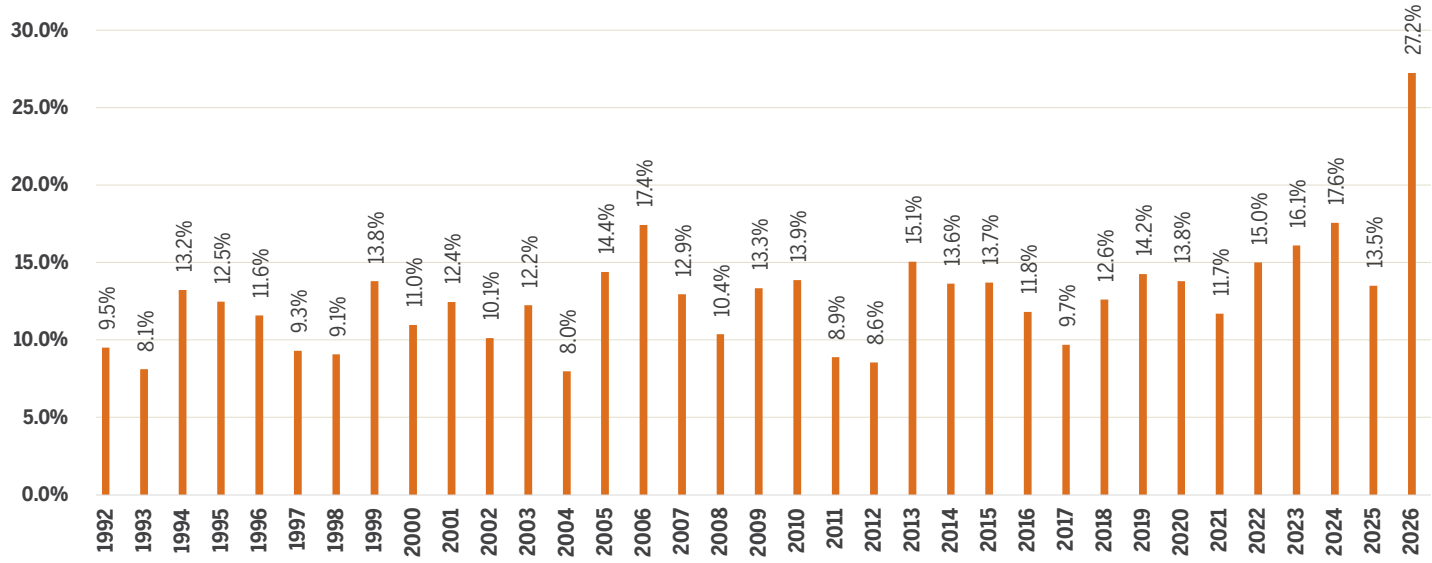

"I really enjoyed getting together with classmates on Saturday night at Hillside Farmacy," said Eric Leventhal '11, permanent class president for the Class of 2011. "I was able to reconnect with some classmates I hadn't seen in many years."

As important as attendance was, the honored class committees were also proud of their fundraising success. The over $5.2 million raised this Reunion will support student scholarships, academic programs, and the Summer Public Service Program, giving future generations of Texas Law students the same opportunities that brought this weekend's celebrants together in the first place.

50 Years of Consecutive Giving

The alumni philanthropy you most often read about is the kind that comes in eye-popping sizes. A landmark endowed fund. The naming gift for a new building. Seed funding for a transformative program. These are great gifts to receive and easy for institutions to tout.

Equally deserving, though, is the kind of philanthropy that Scott Atlas '75 and Dan Hedges '74 have been practicing for a half-century. Something arguably harder and more impressive: showing up every single year, for 50 years running, in gifts large and small, without missing a beat. When you ask them why they do it, long after any pangs of obligation might be expected to give way to the practical difficulties of keeping up, their answers reflect a similar small set of core principles.

The first is that some debts can't be repaid in one fell swoop. Atlas reflects of the struggles faced by his father, Morris, a child of immigrants growing up poor in South Texas. Thanks to education—two degrees from UT Austin, including his law degree in 1950—Morris built a law career out of nothing in McAllen. "He believed to his core that education was the key to future success," Atlas says. By the time the son graduated in 1975, he believed it too: "The Law School put me on the road to upward mobility and success in life... and I can't stop being grateful for that."

Hedges adds that the school kept contributing to his success, even after graduation. "My very first case when I joined the firm that would one day become Porter Hedges, I got from one of my classmates," he says. "It ended up being one of the biggest cases that I ever worked on."

"The Law School gives to you throughout your life," Hedges adds. "You can do the same."

The second idea is one both men say they learned while still students: tuition and state dollars were never the whole story. Hedges remembers learning through some of his favorite teachers—Texas Law legends such as Page Keeton and Charles Alan Wright—that the Law School Foundation, then a primary channel for alumni gifts, was essential to supporting student scholarships, faculty research, and the extracurricular programs that made the degree experience exceptional.

"The school is great," says Atlas, "but it can't stay great through tuition dollars and state support alone. I learned even as a student that what alumni give back is essential to keeping us the greatest deal in legal education."

Both men also say giving back is an inherited habit from their families who saw generosity as part of being a good citizen. "I was trained to be that way," says Hedges. "Simple as that." Atlas tells the same story, though he is quick to point out that he doesn't regard such generosity as an obligation. "It's gratitude," he says.

Finally, both believe that consistency itself is the point. As Hedges puts it, those "year in, year out" gifts help a school budget with confidence: "They know it's going to be there every year." Though Atlas acknowledges that, at least in part, his record of giving is something that emerged from habit. "I can't say I set out to make a donation every year for the rest of my life. It just worked out that way."

"But I sure am glad that it did."

MAKING A COLLECTIVE DIFFERENCE

The Texas Law alumni of Hicks Davis Wynn are all in to support their alma mater, making their firm the first 100% Giving Challenge Champion for 2026. They represent the proud Texas Law alumni who believe in the power of giving back.

"We're so thankful for every firm and alum that took part in this year's 100% Giving Challenge. Some have been part of this tradition for years, and others are just getting started. Together, their support helps us expand programs, meet student needs, and grow in national prominence. Participation in the Challenge continues the proud tradition of paying it forward for the next generation of Texas Law students," said Rylee Holder, Associate Director of Annual Giving and Alumni Relations.

The Challenge is an opportunity for alumni to make a collective difference at their alma mater. Participating firms and offices collaborate to achieve 100% alumni giving in their respective organizations, providing integral support to the Law School, our students, faculty, and programs.

A Dean and a Keeton

When John Keeton, B.A. '95, M.B.A. '02, sat down to hear a local band play at the Little Longhorn Saloon, he had no idea the lead guitarist was Dean Bobby Chesney. Chesney, in turn, did not know that the grandson of Dean W. Page Keeton was in the audience. The chance encounter, helped along by a mutual friend in the band, led to a full-circle moment: John, the grandson of the Law School's longest-serving dean, has made a generous gift supporting Texas Law's project to build a new residence hall, which is set to open in August 2028.

Growing up in the Keeton family, John says it took years for him to understand what his grandfather meant to UT and Texas Law. "Until I was eight or nine, I thought Dean was one of my grandfather's other names. That was just what everyone in Austin called him," John says. "I think Grandad was fairly boisterous in the classroom, but outside of that, he was a little more reserved. My Aunt Carole always had a line, 'Dad taught the law, but Mom was the law in our family.'"

W. Page Keeton, who continued teaching after his 25-year deanship ended in 1974, helped establish Texas Law as a nationally respected law school with a deep commitment to students. Among his many accomplishments, he is known for overseeing the move to Townes Hall and spearheading a historical fundraising campaign to recruit top faculty. His practice of helping students pay for bus tickets home, groceries, or rent when times were tough is reflected today in the Student Resilience Fund. "Coming from the farm himself, he was the first one in his family to go to college," John says. "He had a soft spot for kids who needed a little extra help."

When John learned about the residence hall project, the idea resonated immediately. "Bobby was way ahead of the curve with the idea of providing housing," John says. "It's something Grandad would have been behind."

This project also reflects Keeton's long institutional influence. In 1952, he helped establish the independently functioning University of Texas Law School Foundation. In 2015, the foundation purchased property at the corner of Medical Arts and E. Dean Keeton streets, across from the Law School. That site entered its next chapter in March 2026, when Texas Law broke ground on the new residence hall. Once completed, the hall will provide affordable housing with modern amenities for more than 300 law students within a two-minute walk of campus. Gifts for this project will support endowments for student scholarships.

"So much of what makes this school successful traces back to the foundation Dean Keeton laid, both literally and figuratively," Dean Chesney says. "It's fitting that, as we undertake another transformative building project, the Keeton family is once again playing an important role in the school's future."

John says it's hard to convey how much UT means to his family. "Grandad really believed that whatever he gave back to the law school, it had given him even more," John says. "We're trying to balance the scales for what the Keeton family owes the university—and especially the law school—for the opportunities it has given our family. It's a place that means so much to us. I'm fortunate to be in a position to give, and supporting Texas Law was an easy decision. Even long after he retired, Grandad cared about the law school. Whatever he could do to take care of it came first, and I'm happy to continue that legacy wherever I can."
